Monthly Commentary

July 2026 proved a challenging month for global markets. High valuations in semiconductor and artificial intelligence companies prompted a sharp bout of profit-taking, while renewed tensions between the United States and Iran drove oil prices markedly higher. The MSCI World Semiconductors Index fell by 13.2%, leaving technology-heavy markets in the United States and Asia under pressure. Encouragingly, US durable goods data suggested that business investment remains firm, with spending linked to artificial intelligence continuing to provide support. Both the Bank of England and the Federal Reserve left interest rates unchanged, although policymakers maintained a cautious, hawkish tone and markets continue to expect further tightening later in the year. Brent crude briefly rose above $100 a barrel before retreating, highlighting the sensitivity of markets to developments in the Middle East. Bond markets weakened as yields rose in response to heavy government and corporate issuance and renewed inflation concerns. By contrast, copper advanced on expectations of strong demand and constrained supply. Gold and silver remained volatile, yet continued central-bank demand, particularly from China, helped underpin the longer-term outlook for precious metals. Gold traded in a relatively rangebound channel with intra-day low of $3,960 and a high of $4,166 as it battled to stay over the $4,000 level. Silver waged its own fight after the substantial pullback to near the prior breakout level and dipped to a low of $54.78. Such retests are difficult but also constructive for the longer-term outlook in our view. Volatility remains in place and offers continued opportunities for investors.
